ROOSEVELT GENEALOGY.

1. CLAES MARTENSZEN VAN ROSENVELT arrived in New Netherland, now New York, in one of the most memorable years in the history of his time, for it was about 1649, when the Dutch government was seriously embarrassed. A contest had been waged between the people and the Sovereign of England, as it had long before been carried on in the Netherlands. Opposition had been succeeded by revolt and civil war. Charles the First was beheaded in front of his own banqueting hall, and England declared a republic. The shock which troubled Europe was felt in America. In that year Winthrop died. The Dutch and other traders were forbidden to trade with the New England savages. Arms were brought to New Amsterdam from Holland, the people fearing that war would break out with the savages. Public opinion was running strong against Stuyvesant. Food was scarce. The winter was so cold that "ink froze in the pen." About this time a Burgher government was demanded, and delegates were sent to Holland. Katskill and Claverack were settled. Stuyvesant opposed the reformers. Fort Nassau was demolished. Esopus (N. Y.) and Newtown (L. I.) were settled. The Burgher government was conceded to Manhattan. War was declared between the English and the Dutch nations. The Dutch built fortifications across New Amsterdam. In 1652-1653 all business was at a standstill, and the people were under arms, not knowing when an attempt would be made against the Colony. The next year the Dutch found danger still greater, as Cromwell had dispatched a fleet to America, and as the fleet was leaving New England for New Amsterdam it was met by a vessel bringing news of peace between England and Holland. Later, in 1655, the Colony awoke one morning to find itself in possession of the Indians, but Stuyvesant established quiet by presents instead of by arms.

Claes Martenszen van Rosenvelt was among the numerous Holland colonists who came over to New Amsterdam in 1649 or 1650, undoubtedly bringing with him his wife, Jannetje Samuel—Thomas. In Munsill's American Ancestry, Vol. VI., p. 19, we find the statement that he emigrated to New Amsterdam, with his wife, in August, 1649. No record of their marriage in New Amsterdam has been found, but it is a matter of record in the "Court Minutes of New Amsterdam, August 6, 1655," that "Jannetie Hamel, wife of Nicholas Martensen, declares," etc. The baptismal records of their children in the Reformed Dutch church of New York City are signed by their parents as Claes Martenszen van Rosevelt—Jannetje Samuels—Jannetje Thomas, as shown by the records herein given, Styntie Claes Rosevelt was admitted member of the church November 28, 1678. Claes Rosevelt was admitted December 4, 1679, to the Reformed Dutch church of New York, where they and their descendants have attended for 250 years.

Their children were:

2 CHRISTIAEN, bap. in Reformed Dutch Church of N. Y., Oct. 23, 1650; par. Claes Martenszen; wit. Herman Smetman, Beckje en Fytie. This child died in infancy.

7 ANNA, bap. in Reformed Dutch Church, N. Y. Sept. 10, 1662; m. Jan Van Dalfsen de Vries from Haarlem, Holland.

"Jan Van Dalfsen de Vries, from Rockland County and his wife Anna Van Raasvelt, joined the church in New York, Feb. 27, 1702. He died about 1712 at Tappan, where he had served as 'voorleser.'" (Riker's History of Bap. records copied from Church records, Harlem, p. 532.)

3. ELSJE (Claes Martenszen[1]). Elsie Rosenvelt was bap. February 12, 1652, in the Reformed Dutch Church of New Amsterdam (now New York), married, in 1671, Hendrick Jillesh Meyert (or Meyer); bap. March 6th, 1650. "They resided in Pearl street, near Whitehall street. He was a Cordwainer, in

"Hendrick Jillish Meyer was the son of Jillis (or Gillis) Pieterszen (Meyer), commonly called Pieterszen van der Grouw, or van der Gonda—the ancient town of Gonda or Tergrouw in Holland, his birthplace. House carpenter; came to New Amsterdam in 1633. On the 16th of April, 1639, at the age of 27, in company with Jacob Stoffelson and Tymen Janszen, he makes declaration as to the condition of the fort, church, mills and other public property, at the time of Governor Kieft's arrival in New Amsterdam." (Col. N. Y. Hist. Soc., Vol I., p. 279, new series.) "He married, in New Amsterdam, July 6, 1642, Elsje Hendricks, b. in Amsterdam, Holland; daughter of Hendrick Janszen Snyder or Hendrick Janszen, the tailor, and his wife, Geertje Scheerbuch. He died prior to 1656." (Vol. IX., p. 4, N. Y. G. & B. Rec.)

The children of Elsje Rosenvelt and Hendrick Jillish Meyer were:

In 1728, Mr. Jacobus Rosenvelt bought ten lots, each being 25x120 feet, "in the swamp near cripple Bush," for £10 each. The swamp was originally very low ground, covered by bushes, and was known as the "Cripple Bush" or tangled briars, through which, a few years later, Roosevelt street was opened. Lots were marked off, and it became the seat of several tanneries, and it is still monopolized by the leather business. He afterwards bought the whole of the "Beekman Swamp" for £100, through which he opened Ferry street. The "Beekman Swamp," in the vicinity of Ferry and the neighboring streets, embracing the blocks between the present Nassau and Pearl streets, on the east and west, and from Fulton on the south, to the swamp which furnished its northern boundary, came into requisition for building purposes and became the present Beekman street. (Valentine's Hist. N. Y., p. 285: Old Merchants of N. Y.)

"A stream called 'Wreck Brook' ran from the 'Collect' to the East river, through a meadow; it emptied into the river at the foot of what is now Roosevelt street. The 'Collect Pond' was a large body of fresh water, said to have been seventy feet deep, situated in the basin in the site of which is now occupied by the Tombs."

Johannes de Peyster, who was b. in Haarlem, Holland, early in the seventeenth century, where he was educated by the best doctors of science and literature. He arrived in New Amsterdam early in 1650, bringing with him his exquisite silverware bearing the de Peyster arms ("Shield, silver, charged with two sheep feeding under a linden tree proper. Crest, a linden tree proper. Motto, De Pasco: I feed down, or, I can take care of myself."), as well as his pictures, which were gems of art. He was an owner of many vessels, which sailed from Europe and the West Indies. "The first mention of him in Colonial Records is as an 'Adelborst," or cadet, of one of the Burgher corps. He resided and did business in 'Winckel,' or Shop street, now Whitehall street, opposite Bowling Green. Johannes de Peyster retired from active business in 1664, one of the foremost and fearless of the sturdy Dutch patriots who refused to take the oath of allegiance to the British Crown until they and their fellow citizens were secure in their rights." "In August, 1673, New York, originally New Amsterdam, became New Orange. Johannes de Peyster was one of the three Burgomasters, selected by the council of war, from the six candidates elected by the people to govern it comfortably to the laws and statutes of the fatherland. Isaac Roosevelt was admitted freeman September 27, 1748. His business was that of sugar refining. He built the old sugar house, the first erected before the Revolution, and worked during the war and for forty years after. His store was originally on Wall street. His house faced on Queen street, now Pearl, in Franklin Square. Harper Bros. now own this property. On the rear of his house and in the center of the block was the old sugar house. On the 25th of April, 1772, he removed to St. George's Square, and he issued the following advertisement: "Isaac Roosevelt is removed from his house in Wall Street to the house of his late brother, Jacobus Roosevelt, Jr., deceased, near the Sugar house, and opposite to Mr. William Waltons, being on the northwest side of Queen Street, where his customers may be supplied as usual with double, middling and single refined loaf sugars, clarified, muscovado and other molasses, & etc."

The Chamber of Commerce was organized in 1768 and kept up by the resident merchants during the war. Isaac Roosevelt was one of its first members. (Mem. Hist. N. Y., p. 15, Vol III.) His name is found among the original incorporators of the first public hospital in New York, 1770.

Mr. Isaac Roosevelt enlisted as private in the Sixth Regiment, Dutchess County Militia (Land Bounty Rights: N. Y. in the Revolution, p. 250). He was elected April 22, 1775, a member of the Provincial Congress "On Sunday, April 23, 1775, at noon, a dusty, travel-stained horseman dashed into the city with the news of the affair at Lexington, in a twinkling copies of the dispatch he bore were posted at all places of public resort."

"On May the 1st, 1775, the following gentlemen were among those chosen a general committee for the county and city of New York in the present alarming crisis. 'Isaac Roosevelt, 'Nicholas Roosevelt,' at the same time chosen deputies of the other counties in the Provincial Congress, May 22. Isaac Roosevelt." (N. Y. Mem. Hist., Vol. II., p. 480.)

He was one of the most noted Whigs of the time. On the entry of the British he withdrew from the city. His sacrifices were rewarded by the confidence of his countrymen. Mr. Roosevelt was one of the General Committee of One Hundred to take control of the government. He represented the city of New York in the convention at Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y., to form a constitution for this State, April 20, 1777, and of the New York convention at Poughkeepsie, June 18, 1788, to deliberate on the adoption of the Constitution of the United States.

The men of 1776 had found out long ago that to carry on war successfully money was needed, for they had to pay for powder alone £30 or £40 per 100 wt.; hence the last issue of paper money was soon drawn out of the treasury. About the same time New York applied to the Continental Congress for a loan of £45,000, which was refused, and the Committee of Safety, sitting during the adjournment of the Provincial Congress, ordered, January 6, 1776, that Isaac Roosevelt get an emission of paper money ready as quickly as possible. Delays, however, arose. March 5th the House adopted the report of the Committee for the issue of £55,000, 213,400 bills in denomination of 1-8, 1-6, 1-4, 1-3, 1-2, 2-3, 1, 2, 3, 5, 10, to be redeemed or sunk in three yearly installments, beginning March 1, 1779. (Mem. Hist. N. Y., Vol. IV., p. 339.) The Bank of New York was establised early in 1784, largely through the efforts of William Duer and General Alexander McDougall, who was its first president until his death on 8th June, 1786, when Mr. Roosevelt succeeded him. Mr. Roosevelt was State Senator, 1786-90.

The freeholders and freemen of the city met at the Exchange on March 6. On that day a Union flag with a red field was hoisted on the liberty pole, at 9 o'clock, when the people rallied in large numbers and marched to the Exchange, where they authorized the committee to nominate eleven deputies, for the sole purpose of choosing delegates to the General Congress, such election to be held April 25. The committee nominated deputies for the city and county of New York in the Provincial Congress. They were Philip Livingston, John Jay, James Duane, John Alsop, Isaac Low, Francis Lewis, Abraham Walton, Abraham Brasher, Alexander McDougall, Leonard Lispenard and Isaac Roosevelt. (Mem. Hist. N. Y., Vol. II., p. 443.)

THE FEDERAL TICKET.

To the Citizens of New York:

A number of your fellow citizens, deeply impressed with the importance of the crisis, and convinced that it is your and their interest at the present juncture, by men unequivocally attached to the establishment of a firm National Government, beg leave respectfully to recommend to your support and choice the following persons as delegates to the convention:

John Jay,
John Sloss Hobart,
Richard Harrison,
Richard Morris,
James Duane,
Isaac Roosevelt,
Robert R. Livingston,
Alexander Hamilton,
Nicholas Low.

(Printed in "The Packet" throughout the Summer of 1788.)

New York State convention, called to meet at Poughkeepsie, June 17, 1788. Isaac Roosevelt was one of the seventeen State Senators under Governor Clinton.

In 1784 Mr. Roosevelt resumed his business of sugar refining, in partnership with his son, under the firm name of Isaac Roosevelt & Son. Mr. Roosevelt continued president of the bank until 1791, when he retired and was succeeded by Gulian Verplank. "He was the fourth President of the Society of the New York Hospital, 1790-1794. He died October, 1794, aged 68, beloved and honored as a tried, true and constant parent." (Chamber Commerce Rec.)

In the diary of General George Washington the following lines are written about Nov. 14, 1789: "Received an invitation to attend the funeral of Mrs. Roosevelt (the wife of a Senator of this State), but declined complying with it, first, because the propriety of accepting an invitation of this sort appeared to be very questionable, and secondly (though to do it in this instance might not be improper), because it might be difficult to discriminate in cases which might thereafter happen." (Mem. Hist. N. Y., Vol. III., p. 57.

180. NICHOLAS (Jacobus[77]), bap. December 27, 1767, in New York City. "Was carefully educated. His connection with the invention of the Vertical steamboat paddle wheels is best described by John H. B. Latrobe, in his 'Lost Chapter on the History of the Steamboat' (Batlimore, 1871). Mr. Latrobe's investigations show that, soon after the evacuation of New York by the British, Roosevelt returned to New York from Esopus, where he then resided, and where he had made a small wooden boat, across which was an axle projecting over the sides with paddles at the ends, made to revolve by a tight cord wound around its middle by the reaction of hickory and whalebone springs. In New York he engaged in manufacturing and inventing; subsequently he became interested in the Schuyler copper mines in New Jersey, on the Passaic river, and from a model of Josiah Hornblower's atmospheric machine completed a similar one, built engines for various purposes, and constructed those for the water works of Philadelphia. He was also at the same time under contract to erect rolling works and supply the government with copper drawn and rolled for six 74-gun ships. In 1797, with Robert Livingston and John Stevens, he agreed to build a boat on joint account, for which the engines were to be constructed by Roosevelt, and the propelling agency was to be planned by Livingston. This experiment failed, the speed attained being only equivalent to about three miles an hour in still water. On September 6, 1798, Roosevelt had fully described to Livingston a vertical wheel, which he earnestly recommended. This is the first practical suggestion of the combination that made steam navigation a commercial success, although four years later Robert Fulton believed that chains and floats were alone to be relied on. Livingston, however, had replied to Roosevelt's proposition on October 28, 1798, that 'vertical wheels are out of the question.' But in the Spring of 1802, Livingston having communicated Roosevelt's plans to Fulton, they adopted the former's view, and in January of the next year launched a boat that was propelled by Roosevelt's vertical wheels. Roosevelt in the meantime became greatly embarrassed financially, the government failed to fulfill its contract with him, and he was unable to put his plans in operation. In 1809 he associated himself with Fulton in the introduction of steamboats on the western waters, and in 1811 he built and navigated the "New Orleans," the pioneer boat that descended the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, from Pittsburg to New Orleans in fourteen days, he having previously descended both rivers in a flat boat to obtain information. In July, 1815, he applied to the Legislature of the United States for protection as the inventor of vertical wheels, for which he had obtained letters-patent from the United States in December, 1814. The Legislature, after discussion, decided that 'it was inexpedient to make any special provision in connection with the matter in controversy before the body,' and there the matter rested. Roosevelt's papers came into the possession of Richard S. Cox, his executor, from whom they were obtained, in 1828, and from these, with others from the papers of Chancellor Livingston, a case was prepared and submitted to Roger B. Taney, which had been already submitted to William Wirt, and, both opinions being favorable, a suit was about to be begun, when the consideration of the great expense involved in its prosecution caused the whole matter to be abandoned.

"Roosevelt had by this time retired from active life, residing with his family in Skaneateles, Cayuga County, N. Y.

"In the case submitted for Mr. Wirt's opinion it is said that Fulton never made oath to the application for a patent for vertical wheels over the sides; and that the application itself was signed by another person—a statement that would seem to be corroborated to a great extent by Fulton's own account of his invention in an interview with B. H. Latrobe on February 7, 1809, when the latter was endeavoring to bring about what subsequently took place—a connection between Fulton and Roosevelt in regard to the introduction of steamboats on the western waters. 'I have no pretensions,' said Fulton, 'to be the first inventor of the steamboat. Hundreds of others have tried it and failed. Neither do I pretend to the right to navigate steamboats, except in New York. . . . That to which I claim an exclusive right is the so proportioning the boat to the power of the engine and the velocity with which the wheels of the boat, or both, move with the maximum velocity attainable by the power, and the construction of the whole machine.' In the same conversation Mr. Fulton said: 'As to Mr. Roosevelt, I regard him as a noble-minded, intelligent man, and would do anything to serve him that I could.'" He never married, and the fortune that he inherited was not large, but by investments in real estate and a simple, unostentatious manner of living, he accumulated the sum that he intended from his early manhood to leave for some charitable object. By the terms of his will he left the principal part of his estate to found a noble hospital in New York City, which bears his name, and was formally opened 2d November, 1871. The property left by him was valued at about one million but in the interval of eight years between his death and the opening of the hospital the estate had been so administered by his trustees that the principal aggregated at least one million, exclusive of the ground upon which the buildings were erected in West 59th street. The buildings themselves represented an expenditure of $950,000. The property in 1888 was worth $2,000,000. On the tablet that is placed to his memory in Roosevelt Hospital is inscribed: "To the memory of James Henry Roosevelt, a true son of New York, the generous founder of this hospital, a man upright in his aims, simple in his life and sublime in his benefaction." Was an enthusiastic sportsman, and organized several clubs to restrain the indiscriminate slaughter of game. During the Civil War he was an active Democrat, and a founder of the Allotment Commission and the Loyal National League. He founded the New York State Fishery Commission in 1867, and was appointed one of the three Fish Commissioners, on which he has served without a salary. The reports of the body were prepared chiefly by him, and have led to the appointment of similar commissions in other States. His first experience in politics was in the organization of the citizens' association at the time of the "Tweed Ring" administration in New York City. He was a founder of the committee of seventy and was first vice-president of the "Reform Club." With Charles G. Halpine, he edited the "Citizen," the organ of that association, and after Mr. Halpine's death succeeded to the sole charge of the paper. He served in Congress from 1873 to 1875. Although the pressure of anti-Tammany Democratic organizations forced Tammany Hall to approve his nomination, he denounced the measures of the corrupt clique. In May, 1880, he was appointed United States Minister to the Netherlands, whereupon he resigned the office of Fish Commissioner, giving in his letter to the Governor a review of what had been accomplished during his twenty years of service. He was instrumental in the establishing paid fire and health departments of New York City, and was commissioner of the "Brooklyn Bridge," and for many years served as president of the "Fish Culture Association," of that for the protection of game, of the New York Sportsman's Club, of the International Association for the Protection of Game, of the Holland Trust Company, a founder of the Lotus and Arcadian Clubs, and a member of the American Association for the advancement of science. Was vice-president of the Sons of American Revolution, first president of the Holland Society. He has published "The Game Fish of North America" (New York, 1860); "The Game Birds of the North" (1866); "Superior Fishing" (1866); "Florida and the Game Water Birds" (1868); "Five Acres too Much," a satire on amateur farming that was provoked by Edmund Morris's "Ten Acres Enough" (1869); "Progressive Petticoats," a humorous illustration of modern medical habits (1871), and edited the "Political Works of Charles G. Halpine," with a memoir (1869).

After graduation he went to Europe, and while there climbed to the peak of the snowclad Jungfrau and the rocky Matterhorn, and became a member of the Alpine Club of London. After two years of study of the law in New York was elected the Republican Representative of the Twenty-first District of New York in the Assembly during the years 1882-3-4 and 5, during which time he stood for reform and honest politics, and was known by the literature of the time as a forcible, broad-minded political writer and historian. During this period he passed his vacations in the West, hunting big game, and in 1884 started his cattle ranch on the "Little Missouri," in the Bad Lands, North Dakota. About this time he joined the 8th Regiment of N. Y. S. N. G. as second lieutenant, and soon became captain of one of its companies.

His first writing for publication was during his college life, when editor of the Harvard Advocate. In 1881 his first work of note, "The Naval War of 1812," was published, by G. Putnam's Sons. In 1885 he began his book upon his Western experiences as a ranch owner and hunter. 1886 was candidate for mayor of New York City. During that year he wrote The Life of Thomas H. Benton, in the "American Statesmen" Series. 1887 wrote "The Life of Gouverneur Morris;" 1888, "Ranch Life and the Hunting Trail; 1889 published first two volumes of "The Winning of the West"; 1890 wrote the History of New York City for Edward A. Freeman's series of "Historic Towns;" 1892 wrote his Essays on Practical Politics, published by Putnams, 1893; 1894, "The Wilderness Hunter;" 1895, "Hero Tales from American History," by Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge and himself, by the Century Company; also his fourth volume of "The Winning of the West;" also part author and editor of two volumes of the Boone and Crockett Club's "Big Game of the United States," 1895. Oliver Cromwell, 1900.

He was appointed by President Cleveland, during the latter's first administration, a Republican member of the United States Civil Service Commission, and distinguished himself in this position by vigorous efforts in enforcing civil service regulations.. He resigned this office May 1, 1895, to accept appointment by Mayor Strong as Police Commissioner of New York City, and was elected president of the Board of Police Commissioners. Afterwards resigned to accept his appointment by President McKinley, April 6, 1897, as Assistant Secretary of the United States Navy, which position he held during the preparation for the Spanish-American War. May 6, 1898, he resigned to accept the command of lieutenant-colonel of the First United States Regiment of Volunteer Cavalry, so well known as "The Rough Riders." In July, 1898, was made colonel for his gallant conduct in the charge up San Juan Hill. His service terminated September 16, 1898. On the 8th of November, 1898, he was elected Governor of the State of New York, which office he filled until he was elected Vice-President of the United States on the ticket with William McKinley for his second term as President, in November, 1900, and after the death of William McKinley, September 14, 1901, in Buffalo, N.
